Customer Reviews

I've purchased this book, and a few other retired Army manuals, just out of pure interest in reading how the military operates and trains. The television seems to be poorly equipped at conveying the true nature of how things work. The manual seemed to be an original print and was in great shape. The contents had some really interesting parts, such as using a watch as a compass, and ways to survive (get water and so on). Now, I wear war paint on my face constantly, and make loud hooping sounds at random. Sometimes, when I'm walking down the street, I get a running start and roll like I'm on fire. This drives fear into my opponents faces and causes them to flee.

Its ok. I was looking for more info on survival in an nature environment. This dose provide some info but I wouldn't want to go into the deep wilderness with just the info in this book its lacking big time.

Firefox books are the best I've see so far.

Full of interesting information about communication methods, demo procedures, and team formations as well as a wealth of other information for anybody interested in military knowledge.

I use a variety of field manuals as reference for airsoft military simulation. There are so many things in this book that can be applied to a squad. I also recommend getting FM-7-8, which is a culmination of numerous Army field manuals aimed at squad tactics and methods.

Well I guess I am the idiot for thinking i would get the whole book. It has quite a bit in it though.
